

Computer network

Computers open up whole areas of electronic media to people. One organisation, GreenNet, is offering world wide contact to organisations like Friends of the Earth and New Internationalist magazine.

GreenNet is a global computer network for peace, environment and human rights. It is part of the Association of Progressive Communications which has over 3,000 subscribers across the globe. Those subscribers are offered an information service on a mass of subjects ranging from Central America to marine pollution, from an environmental news service from Greenpeace to the news about the plight of the indigenous people from Survival International. It also has provided up to the minute reports on the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament (III) and contrasting reports from both Soviet and Western News Agencies about the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

GreenNet is a non profit organisation. They can be contacted at 26-28 Underwood Street, London N1 7JQ. Tel 01 490 1510.
